

NAGA Java Reserve

Naga are, according to Hindu beliefs, mythical creatures that inhabit the underworld where they guard the treasures of the earth. The figures are illustrated as a combination of a snake and a dragon, a symbol of abundance and fertility, and follow the underground to steal the best batches of rum.

Before sugar cane was ever planted in the Caribbean, the people of South Asia were drinking Arrack. In the late 15th century, merchants reaching the island of Java discovered that planters had developed a recipe for fermenting Asian sugarcane using yeast derived from red rice.

Java Reserve is distilled on the island of Java in a traditional Asian alembic called Tiangous. This method of making rum from molasses dates back to the Middle Ages. Like Chinese Baijiu and Japanese sake, the rum is fermented from molasses and fermented Javanese red rice. It is then aged for 3 years in calabash wood barrels, followed by 4 years in American Bourbon oak barrels.

Naga Pearl of Jakarta Indonesian rum is aged in three different types of barrels. First of all, it spends 3 years in calabash wood barrels, which are responsible for the spicy finish. This is followed by 4 years in American oak Bourbon barrels, giving it notes of vanilla and roasted almonds. Finally, it is placed in cherry wood barrels for 1 year to bring out the honey and cherry flavors.

NAGA 10 YO Siam Edition

Naga are, according to Hindu beliefs, mythical creatures that inhabit the underworld where they guard the treasures of the earth. The figures are illustrated as a combination of a snake and a dragon, a symbol of abundance and fertility, and follow the underground to steal the best batches of rum.

Before sugar cane was ever planted in the Caribbean, the people of South Asia were drinking Arrack. In the late 15th century, merchants reaching the island of Java discovered that planters had developed a recipe for fermenting Asian sugarcane using yeast derived from red rice.

The molasses, which comes from Thai sugarcane, is fermented for 36 hours before distillation in a distillation column. This resulting rum contains 67% alcohol, and then goes into bourbon barrels made of American oak for 10 years. During maturation, rum losses are replenished only with the same rum, and the maturation process itself takes place on a plain below sea level to keep evaporation to a minimum and the process stable.

Anggur means wine grape in Indonesian. To create this rum finish, we filled 220-liter French oak Seguin Moreau barrels, which contained Château Pas de l'Âne 2019 Saint-Emilion Grand Cru vinified by Nicolas Baptiste for 18 months, with Naga Java Reserve rum at 65% strength. Six weeks later, we released the rum and filtered it. This is an unprecedented combination of Asian spirits-making culture with a European complement and fizz.

Indonesia is the world's largest producer of spices. So in creating Naga's spiced rum, it was obvious to name it Malacca after the port in Malaysia from which ships loaded with Asian fruits and spices depart for Europe. Kumquat peel, Indonesian jambu (Java apple) pulp, citronella and coriander are used to give the Indonesian rum citrus flavors and freshness in the finish.
